Latest Headlines

Questions Loom for House's Top Inquisitor

As one of Congress' chief inquisitors, Jason Chaffetz shot to national prominence using the same playbook that has worked for both parties — he relentlessly investigated the opposition.

Boxer's Advice for Dealing with Trump: Look at Me and Inhofe

A notoriously liberal, pain-in-Republicans'-neck, four-term senator, Barbara Boxer, has some advice for those she's leaving behind as she ends her more than three-decade career on the Hill: Be honest with each other.

Can Republicans Afford to Oppose Tillerson?

Congressional Republicans said Tuesday that Donald Trump's nomination of Rex Tillerson to run the State Department gave them "serious concern," raised "red flags," and prompted "many questions which must be answered."

Opinion: The Romney Agonistes

Poor, gullible Mitt Romney. He thought maybe, just maybe, Donald Trump wouldn't focus his transition on settling petty scores. He fooled himself into believing the Donald might consider him a diplomat rather than a comic prop. He got so wrapped up in the possibilities of the moment that he let photographers snap shots of him at a dinner with Trump, not realizing that, without doubt, he was the main course.

Trump's Cabinet Picks Unexpectedly Putting Senate GOP in Bind

Senate Republicans had hoped that Donald Trump's Cabinet selections could give them a leg up in the 2018 midterm races.

Ryan Zinke Picked to Be Trump's Choice for Interior Secretary
